Re Item V

Reasoned statement with regard to novelty, inventive step or industrial applicability;
citations and explanations supporting such statement

Document D1, which is considered to represent the most relevant state of the art, discloses (cf. D1 Section III and section VI) a method for estimating the resonance frequencies of a speech signal having both source and filter contributions by either looking at the DPS of the Fourier transform of the signal, after smoothing or taming it to remove spikes, or searching the z-plane for causal and anticausal poles by looking at the complex frequency spectrum and the corresponding DPS of the AR model of the signal.

The subject-matter of claim 1 differs from D1 in that the intermediate step of determining the AR modelling of the signal is skipped by directly investigating the z-transform of the input signal.

The subject-matter of claim 1 is therefore new (Article 33(2) PCT).

The problem to be solved by the present invention may be regarded as how to simplify the existing methods by removing unnecessary steps.

The solution to this problem proposed in claim 1 of the present application is considered as involving an inventive step (Article 33(3) PCT) for the following reasons:

Although, once the possibility of the fact that the resonances of an input signal are composed of causal and anticausal contributions is known, it is straightforward and standard mathematical procedure to analyse the origin of those contributions in the complex z-plane by subjecting the signal to a z-transformation, the applicant seems to satisfy a long felt want by overcoming a technical prejudice because the existing relevant art is pointing away from the proposed simplification.

Claims 2 - 11 are dependent on claim 1 and as such also meet the requirements of the PCT with respect to novelty and inventive step.
